Personal message: Hi Bob, Just saw this today. I think it is only fair that if Gina is meeting with mining interests that she at least take a meeting with stakeholders on Bristol Bay. Let me know your thoughts. Hope you have safe travels and look forward to hearing from and talking with you soon. All my best, Wayne Nastri

EPA: Mining reps, McCarthy chat on industry priorities and concerns (Wednesday, March 27, 2013)

Manuel Quinones, E&E reporter

National Mining Association officials met yesterday with President Obama's nominee for U.S. EPA administrator, agency air chief Gina McCarthy, her calendar and NMA confirmed.

NMA has a history with McCarthy over the work being done by the division she leads, the Office of Air and Radiation.

But NMA spokesman Luke Popovich said the meeting yesterday was aimed at making McCarthy more aware of the group's priorities.

"The purpose was to help her understand the breadth of the industry we represent -- not just coal but minerals, metals, machinery -- and the breadth of this industry's impact on the economy," he said.

"The purpose was to help her understand the breadth of the industry we represent -- not just coal but minerals, metals, machinery -- and the breadth of this industry's impact on the economy," he said.

Despite the disagreements between NMA and EPA during Obama's first term, Popovich said, "we felt it was a very constructive conversation."

McCarthy also met with William Reilly, EPA administrator in the George H.W. Bush administration, her calendar showed.

Reporters Jason Plautz and Nick Juliano contributed.
